You'll never forget the mountain road which brings you to Moraine! Turning off the Lake Louise road, it circles up to seven thousand feet, along its way you catch views of valleys and evergreen slopes stretching to east and north and south. Then, gradually, the road dips down to the lake shore, and you find a comfortable lodge and a whole series of smaller cabins, all fitted for your special comfort.

Moraine Lake Lodge has a charm all its own. Cozy furnishings of maple are used in the central chalet with its cheery fireplace. Dining alcoves with windows on the lake, flank the room on three sides, and there's a curio stand—attractively equipped with everything from native handicrafts to papers and picture post-cards—in one corner of the lounge itself.

Modern deluxe cabins each with its own verandah, and with hot and cold water, shower bath, toilet, etc., are heated by fireplaces—both picturesque and utilitarian—and each bedroom has its own bath. The furnishings are simple and effective, with homespun for curtains, bedspreads and chair covers.

SCALE THE HEIGHTS OF THE CANADIAN ROCKIES . . .

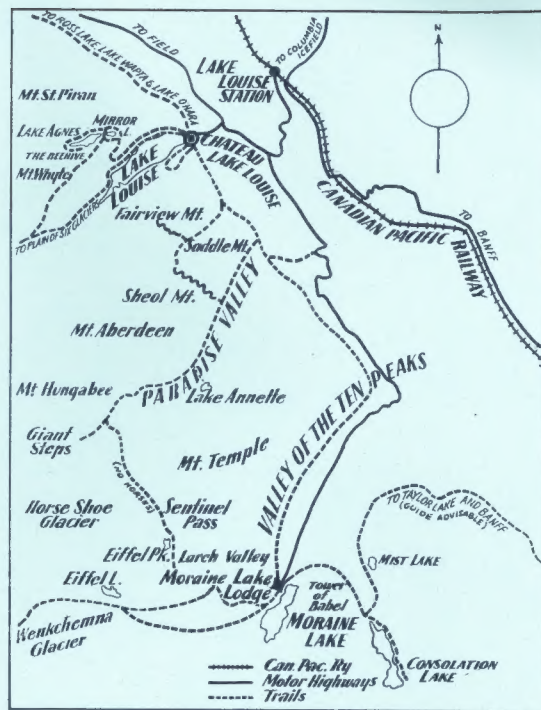

Ten peaks — ten glaciers!

High in the Valley of the Ten Peaks it stands—this quiet, beautiful retreat known as Moraine Lake Lodge. Ten giant mountains tower about the lake. Ten glaciers glint and glimmer in the sun. And at their feet lies the opalescent lake, its shore dotted with the sturdy structures of the Lodge and its attendant cabins.

It's only nine miles from Moraine Lake to Lake Louise, that other beauty spot with which it is associated in so many minds. And yet Moraine Lake is famous in its own right—its ever-changing waters no less blue, its surrounding mountain peaks no less impressive.

You'll enjoy real comfort on your holiday at Moraine Lake Lodge. Electric light, running water, adequate heating facilities, make the cabins comfortable at all times.

Boating on the lake, fishing in Consolation Lake and streams nearby, hiking over trails to Wenchemna Glacier or Larch Valley on the terrace below Sentinel Pass — all these await you. And if photography is your hobby you'll find shots aplenty in this beauty spot of the Canadian Rockies.

Lofty Mountains . . . Limpid Lakes in the Valley of the Ten Peaks

The tranquility of the Moraine Lake country is something you'll never forget. It's so still you can hear the gentle lapping of water, the sweet high notes of invisible birds, the soft rustle of wild things scurrying through the woods, as you walk along.

A network of paths surrounds Moraine Lake. Larch Valley is reached by an easy trail commanding wonderful views of the Ten Peaks. Branching off from this is the high trail to Wenckhemna Pass. Crossing Larch Valley you mount to Sentinel Pass, and drop down into Paradise Valley. This trail connects with trails to Lake Annette, a tiny jewel beyond Mount Temple; to the Giant's Steps, where the waters of Paradise Creek come tumbling over mammoth rocks; to Saddle Back Mountain over which you may pass to Lake Louise.

Consolation Valley is another verdant retreat little more than two miles from Moraine, along a trail which skirts the Tower of Babel, an odd formation land-marking the way to Consolation Lake. In Consolation Lake there is good fly fishing for trout. Another expedition is the trail by way of Mist Lake and Taylor Lake to the Banff-Windermere Highway. This is a spectacular route for trail riders.

ATTRACTIVE CABINS . . .

Moraine Lake Lodge is at the base of Mount Temple, one of the highest mountains (11,628 feet above sea level) in this region. Paradise Valley lies beyond, between Moraine and Lake Louise.

Moraine Lake Lodge is a happy hunting ground for photographers. More than that — it offers peace and quiet—a spot of charm and comfort, high in the mountains, but accessible from train or motor road within an afternoon's ride.
